the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 21st century. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) states that the child has the right to be heard in decisions that affect him or her. The United Nations (1999) states that:

Children are not just the future, they are the present. They are entitled to the same respect and dignity as adults. They are entitled to be heard in decisions that affect them. They are entitled to a safe and secure environment in which to grow and develop. They are entitled to a world free of violence and conflict. They are entitled to a world in which their basic needs are met and their rights are protected. (United Nations 1999, p. 1)
